41~42 題

It is often said that humans are one of the few animals that can misunderstand each other. One of the reasons for this is differences in the meaning of body language. Such differences include simple gestures like pointing and nodding. An American points to his head when he thinks someone is clever. However, in Europe, this means he or she is stupid. Sometimes using the wrong gesture may get us into trouble. In our culture, nodding our heads up and down means “yes” and shaking our heads from side to side means “no.” However, in parts of India, Greece and Turkey, the opposite is true. The meaning of gestures can also change over time. In the 1960s, the “V” sign meant “peace.” However, during World War II in England, it meant “victory.” Obviously, body language can be very confusing when people from different cultures, or even different generations.
